

This brief transcript depicts the initial stages of a planning meeting, focusing on a problem-solving approach. The core topic is dividing a large task or project ("it") into smaller, more manageable components.

* Main Topic: Project decomposition/division of labor. The participants are strategizing how to break down a large undertaking into smaller, more easily handled parts.

* Key Decision: The primary decision is to employ a "divide and conquer" strategy, splitting the project into at least two parts. The exact number of divisions isn't specified.

* Action Items: No specific action items are assigned in this excerpt. The conversation only reaches the point of deciding how to approach the problem (division), not who will handle which part. The next step, determining how to manage the individual components ("virtual What do we do?"), is implied but not addressed fully.

* Points of Agreement/Disagreement: The transcript shows unanimous agreement on using a divide-and-conquer strategy. However, the details of the division and subsequent steps are left unresolved. There is no evidence of disagreement. The incomplete sentence structure suggests the meeting is ongoing and further discussion is needed to finalize the division and assign tasks.
